

logos and gradients

This is the primary logo for Sukhii ubuntu.

The centre of the motif makes use of a freeform gradient fill of multiple colours. This gradient is a dynamic element, where the colours and position of the colour can be edited to create multiple versions of the logo.

The logo can be reversed like so, on a gradient fill background.
In such a case, the centre portion of the motif is kept in grey.

■ gradient colours

Some general points to keep in mind while selecting the colours for the gradient:

- 1. The colours must work in harmony with any image or illustration placed alongside the logo on any artwork.
- 2. The colours must be selected in such a way that there is enough contrast against the ubuntu grey and ubuntu white.

✗ Avoid using extremely dark colours or light and desaturated colours, as they offer very little contrast against the ubuntu grey and white.

✗ Avoid placing individual colours only against the corners of an artwork.

✓ Instead blend the colours by adjusting the blur radius and arranging the colours organically across the artwork.

✗ Avoid using more than four colours for a single gradient.

✓ Instead use tones of the existing colours to create depth in the gradient.

■ selecting gradient
colours from an image

The logo gradients colours can be colour picked from images used on the artwork. The colours thus selected must work in harmony with each other and capture the essence of the image used. Tones and shades of individual colours can be tweaked to make them work for the gradient.

NATURE
IN ABUNDANCE

Keywords in a headline can be highlighted with the use of gradients.

Preference should be given to the grey background logo format across designs. The gradient background logo format can be used sparingly in places where a grey background would disturb the artwork or design.
